Quadrant rolls out the latest in up to the minute technology

Keeping pace with the latest innovations that the internet can offer, Tasmanian superannuation fund Quadrant has introduced new technology to enable a more interactive way for members to view the latest super performance results online or direct to their mobile phone.

In a cooperative initiative with technology specialists Future Medium, Quadrant's recently launched website now shows their most recent unit prices with the click of a button. The features allow website visitors to track performance in a user friendly way, with options including current unit prices, graphs and performance history for various Quadrant investment options over the past 10 years.

Quadrant CEO Wayne Davy said that the fund is always on the look out for ways to help members gain easier access to information about their retirement nest egg.

"This sort of access to fund performance is becoming increasingly important to super fund members and we're keen to ensure our members have as much relevant information as possible to help them understand and manage their super," he said.

Quadrant is also one of the few super funds now offering members the option of viewing unit prices on their mobile phone. Simply entering the address into the web browser on mobiles that have the required functionality allows members to see the latest unit prices for both the super and pension funds, as well as view performance history and graphs.

"Investing is a dynamic and fast paced environment, and we're pleased that we can help members keep up with these changes by providing such accessible and user friendly technology," Mr Davy said.
